The air inside your home can be 5x more polluted than the air outside.*

What are the signs of poor ventilation in my home?

Condensation, mold growth, lingering odors, and illness can all be signs of poor ventilation. As stagnant, indoor air becomes trapped, airborne pollutants including dust, dander, viruses, and mold build up and can affect you and your family by making you feel sick and negatively impacting your sleep and ability to concentrate.

But my home has exhaust fans and hoods— isn't it already ventilating?

Exhaust fans work well in bathrooms and kitchens where it's necessary to remove unwanted odors or moisture, for example, from air in a specific area for a short period of time. While this spot ventilation is important, it doesn't address the need for consistent, controlled ventilation throughout your entire home. That's where we come in with AprilAire fresh air ventilation systems designed to bring fresh air into your whole home to dilute all the pollutants that could be present. And since it connects to your home's HVAC system, it's like your home is inhaling a deep breath of cleansing, fresh air.
